From the Pastor's Desk

Today's readings crackle with the Apostles' excitement over the new understanding they were experiencing after the Resurrection and with their work of creating a new way of life, a community of the resurrected Christ—living and life-giving. In the light of Resurrection, Jesus' words in the Gospel, spoken before the Passion, take on new meaning.

The First reading is part of a lengthy story that began with Peter healing a crippled man near the Jerusalem Temple and then addressing the people who stood around him, amazed at what he had done. As the crowds continued to grow, Peter and John were arrested, and his accusers demanded to know by whose authority they did such a thing. Peter is answering that question in today's First Reading. His sense of urgency and conviction ring out as he testifies that "there is no salvation through anyone else." He is, after all, "filled with the Holy Spirit."

Likewise, in the Second Reading we can hear a deep sense of community identity. Thanks to the loving gift of the Father, which is his son, we have become "children of God" both now and in the future, when God (or Christ) is fully revealed and we become like him.

In today's Gospel, John uses the image of the Good Shepherd to explain what it means to be a faith community. It is about our shared trust in Christ who put his life on the line to take care of his flock and keep them secure. It is about a flock that can be open and welcoming to others without fear for its safety, because the one who laid down his life for them has taken it up again as the Father commanded.

Church in Central and Eastern Europe

Every year we here in the Archdiocese of New York take up a special collection next weekend for the Church in Central and Eastern Europe. During the time of communist reign in many countries, practicing the faith became illegal, church buildings were confiscated, and people were forced to hide and secretly share the truths of the Gospel. After decades of institutional oppression and persecution, Catholics still struggle to rebuild not only their physical places of worship, but also their church ministries and communities. With your support of this collection, the Church is providing resources to these communities to breathe new life into the faith once again.
